

FORD THEATER checklist

I became interested in the Ford Theater when I heard the ten shows that Marc Brown discovered and dubbed for trading. I was struck by the over-all quality of the acting and direction. The actors were chosen for ability on the air and voice contrast rather than name alone. Their programs are among the best in radio.

The series ran only two years; Sunday afternoon on N.B.C. for the 1947-'48 season and Friday evenings for the 1948-'49 season on C.B.S. They intended to offer as many original scripts as they could but the N.Y. Times noted that they were getting only a very few of the quality they wanted. As far as I could find out the only original scripts were for 11-9-47 and 12-28-47. With the beginning of the second season there were major changes in the series. The policy of using radio actors gave way to name guest stars and Fletcher Markle became producer and appeared in some of the plays. During this second season there was also a Ford Theater once a month on TV.

Incidentally, there is a program called Secret Agent with Douglas Fairbanks circulating without opening or close or other identification. It is sometimes called a Studio One (probably because of the appearance of Markle in both series) and sometimes a Theater Guild but, as, can be seen here, it was a Ford Theater from 11-26-48.

The first show received a bad review from the N.Y. Times because they did not like the script adaptation but the actors and over-all production were rated highly. Where I list no casts the reason is that the Times did not include that information.
